anid he wished to point out that it had appeared in the Press that they allowed each night attendant and nurse 4lbs. of tea, 26lbs. of sugar, and 6lbs. of butter. That seemed enormous, and the Committee had been severely criticised for it. He wished it to be noted that the special allowance for night attendants was an extra, and was spread over twenty persons at Richmond and eighteen or twenty at Portrane. He did not think it was at all excessive.

The Town Clerk forwarded a resolution of the Dublin Carporation in favour of the creation of a great harbour at Galway in connection with the proposed All Red Route.

Mr. Wallace said that they had on their books a resolution strongly in favour of the project. The Chamber of Commerce had also taken the question up some years ago.

The resolution was forwarded to the Law and Parliamentary Committee.

The auction, which commenced at 11 o'clock, was attended by a very large number of buyers, and it is rarely that such an attendance is seen in Dublin. Bidding was brisk, and prices in moet instances were high. Children's toys were sold at a knowt retail prices, while furniture, bicycles, and fancy goods were also in demand. Clothing and drapery goods were disposed of at fairly cheaporices. The sale, which is attracting unusual interest, will be continued to-day, when jewel-ber, pedice clothing, boots, and sundry goods will be sold.

THE WARD UNION.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The weather was almost summer-like on Wednesday, when the meet was at Duntoyne, where a very large field assembled, including the Lord Licatenant and General Sir Bryan Mahon. According to custom from this fixture, the stag was enlarged on Major Blackwood Hamilton's demene at Vesington, and he twisted about a good deal at the commencement around Baytown Park and Cornelstown. Hounds were laid on without running this preliminary circle, and went very last away over Vesington to Cookstown, and down to the flooded river near Mrs. Barry's house, crossing straight over, and on to the high road. Luckily a momentary check allowed the field to get ou good terms again with hounds, and they went on to the Bush Farm mearing, alongside of which they kept, through the bottoms of Rathregan to Batterstown railway station, where the stag had taken possession of the waiting-room. Hounds were taken away, and on being relaid on they went by Parsonstown to Pelleststown, where hounds put in an admirable piece of work over a very intricate line. Having worked it out, they went very fast over by the gorse and Clonross to Johnstown, where they bore to the right across the marchy bottoms underlying Drumree to Readsland and on by Lishamstown and Clananstown to Warrenstown, and into Killua Castle demesne, where a safe capture was effected after a very good hunt.

It was pointed out that the enormous rise in the cost of living makes life very difficult on the present level of pensions, especially where they are under £30. The number of pensions concerned is two thousand seven hundred, and the suggestion was made that their cases might be met by a grant of £14,000. Mr. Duke gave his visitors a sympathetic hearing, and promised that their representations should receive fits best consideration, but he pointed out that

Mr. Duke gave his visitors a sympathetic hearing, and promised that their representations should receive fits best consideration, but he pointed out that best consideration, but he pointed out that sequently the deputation were received by Mr. Stanley Baldwin, on behalf of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and he promised to devote careful personal attention to the examining of their case. In this visit Mr. Devlin, who has largely recovered wanted shopkeepers who had started business since 1915 to get a supply of sugar. Captain Bathurst fully explained the conditions under which supplies of sugar were granted, but Mr. MacVeagh was not convinced, and made quite a speech, until the Speaker remarked that he must "stop this supply of sugar." Concerning the sugar difficulty, a suggestion put forward by Sir Frederick Banbury deserves attention. The right hon. baronet has given notice of his intention to ask the representative of the will in future only sell sugar on the condition that the retailer sells it without requiring the purchase of any other article, and whether he will refuse to sell sugar.

pulsion had been removed by the assur-ances of the Home Secretary, though he should feel more satisfied if that assur-ance was incorporated in the Bill itself. ance was incorporated in the Bill itself.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, speaking from the point of view of Labour, was rather alarmed at the very drastic powers which it was proposed to place in the hands of one man; but it was left to Mr. Molteno to move the rejection of the Bill. His main objection was that the Bill set up a bureaucracy and an autocracy worthy of Prussian ideas. Mr. Dillon took the same line. The muddle caused by the setting up of endless departments would be added to by this Bill. In regard to Ireland there was not the slightest justification for a Bill of this kind, and in Committee he is should move an amendment to exempt Ireland from the scope of the measure. Other speakers who followed thinly disguised their fears as to compulsion, and the Home Secretary, with a view to giving more force to his assurances, announced that he had the authority of Mr. Bonar Law to state that words would make assurance doubly sure. Mr. Molteno ultimately withdrew his motion for the rejection of the Bill, which was then read a second time.

Nevertheless, with curious inconsistency, he proposes to ask the House of Commons—which cannot save Great Britain—to save the country from the anger of an urban proletariat. If, on the other hand, farmers do their duty loyally by the nation in this crisis, they may be assured that the State in the future will more than repair its past neglect of their industry.

I happened to be dining at a famous West End club on the first of its meatless days, and, except that the menu was longer than usual—most of the courses being technically half-courses—I should hardly have noticed the difference, so skilfully had the chef utilised fish, eggs, and vegetables to take the place of the Beard of Trade have made an Order under the Defence of the Realm Regulations of the Beard of Trade have made an Order under the Defence of the Realm Regulations of the United Kingdom other than those in South Weles and Monmouthshire, of which possession was taken on December 1st last.

IRISH QUESTIONS IN PARLIAMENT.

FITENDING MUNITION WORKS Ar. KELLAWAY, in reply to Sir Thomes Esmonde, said that the Minister of Munitiss was kept continually informed of the Possibilities of increasing the output of munitions has Ireland, and had recently very carefully notived the whole position. As a result of the review it was hoped to extend one of the national factories, and instructions had begiven to press on the completion of a certain cartridge factory in Ireland. These two cats sions would result in the employment of satural hundred more hands. Large orders for as munition boxes had recently been placed an Irish firms.

THE IRISH PRISON SERVICE.

Mr. DUKE, in reply to Mr. Orumley, at that at the inception of the new scheme for the trish Prison Service, Class 2 was filled by the absorption of prison officers whose capacity, length of service, and existing rate of remuses tion entitled them, in the opinion of the Prison Board, to be placed in that rank. In turn warders could only be promoted to Class 2 was aatisfied the Board that they possessed the necessary literary and technical qualification to enable them to perform the duties of the class. The Board had very good means to enable them to perform the duties of the class. The Board had very good means their officers, and they selected for promotion those who, in their opinion, possessed the bun qualifications. The suggestion that serve correspondence was conducted between prison governors and clerks in the office of the Prison Board was unfounded.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1917.

Nationalist Policy. The Ministry of National Service Bill was read a second time in the House of ing, agriculture, and other vital industries. The beginning of the debate found some Radical and Labour members uneasy lest such organised service should open the door for industrial conscription; but the door for industrial conscription; but the National service will remain voluntary so long as the voluntary response is adequate to the national need. Compulsion may become necessary, but if, and when, the new Ministry wants compulsory powers, it must get them from the Imperial Parliament. The safeguard is ample; it satisfied the most suspicious Labour men. Only one member of the townsmen's worship of the "cheap food" fetish forced the Government to adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture and adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt an economic heresy which for many long years past has made agriculture adopt to an audience which included by the hotels and clubs. There is an obvious advantage in everybody's powers, it may be a devised industry. Yet, if farmers carry the human tendency to exploit a sudden prosperity so far as to create a formidable movement of town against country, they will be fool. The State has a short way in the Stellera Lady Carson, Lord and Lady Ward. The picture gives where met will be served. It was a flay, for not only is the field, and, for many long years past has made agriculture adopted by the hotels and clubs. There is an obvious advantage in everybody's between the flower flow lurking in the background of the new Bill. He does not believe that even the country from the Teutonic usurpations of the War Office. Nevertheless, with curious inconsistency, he proposes to ask the House of Commons—which cannot save Great Britain—to save Ireland. In the Committee Teutonic usurpations of labour who have not yet given holidays to workers on account of the two Bank holidays which were postponed last year have only a few days in which possession was taken on December latter.

Great Britain. Potato prices, both wholesale and retail, are now fixed by the Food sale and retail, are now fixed by the Food Controller. The price which growers were entitled to charge to factors was first fixed at £8 per ton, to be increased after the end of this month. This arrangement supplied farmers with an obvious incentive to hold their supplies until after that date. At the last market farmers in many Irish districts were compelled, very properly, by the police to sell at the fixed price of £8 per ton. In the meantime a new scale of prices, to apply to the whole United Kingdom, has been sanctioned by the War Cabinet, though the Order enforcing it has not yet been made. Under this new scale

The holidays are due to move for the exclusion of Ireland from the operation of the National Service Bill. We must not be asked even to volunteer civilian service for the winning of what Mr. Redmond once called—how long ago it seems!—"Ireland's war." Nobody has suggested compulsory national service for Ireland, but Mr. Dillon's notorious tact and statesmanship were not to be baffled. He cheerfully assumed the worst in order that he might the more successfully disgust and irritate an assembly which, a significant of the National Service Bill. The holidays are due to all employés who were entitled by statute, agreement, or custom, to receive holidays for the Mr. Dublin as elsewhere, have complied with the order already by closing their establishments entirely for two days. trouble than you' bargain for." So spoke the de facto leader of the Nationalist Party, and, as usual, the de jure leader and all the other members of the party were miserably silent. As he has led official Nationalism down the steep descent since the end of the Irish rebellion, so Mr. Dillon leads it still, and the pace grows quicker as the slope becomes steeper. No military service for Ireland; no foot of Mr. Dillon's on a recruiting platform; no appeal to Nationalist farmers to invest in the War Loan; no voluntary service by Irish civilians; sinister threats excited by the imaginate the Nationalist Party's contribution to the tremendous confliction of the tremendous confliction of the tremendous confliction to the tremendous confliction of the tremendous confliction to the trements of the decision, and would be able to announce their arrangements. The further postponement of the Home Rule debate beyond next week will recall some remarks I made in regard to Mr. T. P. O'Connor's resolution a few days ago. At the time of writing there is not official explanation of the postponement, but a good deal of comment was afloat in the Lobby concerning the amendment of which Sir George Reid has given notice inviting the House to agree that it is undesirable to raise at this juncture so highly controversial a question as that of Home Rule. I am able to say that Sir George's intervention is made entirely on his own account, and has had no external prompting. It is the more interesting because he is in normal times a Home Ruler, though not to the extent favoured by the Nationalists. NATIONAL SERVICE AND INCOME TAX.

Mr. John Galsworthy writes to The Times today.—National service, voluntary or compulsory, will rule the coming year. May I ask how the Government is dealing with income tax procedure? A barristen solicitor, writer, or other professional man has earned in 1915, 1916, 1917, say, £4,000, £5,000, £5,000, respectively, and will have to pay in, say, February, 1918, 5s. at least in the pound on a statutory income of £4,000—a matter of £1,000, plus super-tax. In February of 1917 he responds to Mr. Neville Chamberlain's appeal, and does national work at, say, £300 a year. Is he, in February, 1918, to find this £1,200, or so, of taxation out of his £300, besides living and, perhaps, keeping a family on it? If he has been patriotic, he has given or invested all his surplus income these last years for purposes of the war, and has no balance at his bank. There must have been hard cases of this kind already, since income tax has run so high, but with national service they will be greatly multiplied. The only reasonable demand, of course, in these days of high tax, is payment on net income for the year. Mr. John Galsworthy writes to The Times to NATIONAL SERVICE FINANCIAL RESOLUTION.

The Financial Resolution authorising expenditure under the Ministry of National Service.

MR. DILLON'S THREAT.

Mr. JOHN DILLON, opposing the bill, said that the confusion which had arisen as a result of the attempt to fix prices for potatoes was spreading in all directions. After sitting for hours, the War Cabinet decided to add £1 at the four to the price of potatoes. In spite of protests, this great machinery had extended across to Ireland. To-day the Irish police were seizing the farmers in the markets of Ireland and compelling them to sell at £8 a ton, in spite of the fact that the War Cabinet had fixed £10. The result was confusion. By this multiplication of departments they had seen confusion werse confounded. They had seen the Minister of Agriculture hopelessly struggling with the matter?

Mr. HOPE—The Dutch Government has succeeded to the functions formerly exercised by America.

Mr. BUTCHER asked whether negotiations was still going. Minister of Agriculture hopelessly struggling against three other departments, and now it was proposed completely to solve the whole question by adding another department to the general confusion. They had no indication in Office, or was it not, in deciding what labour was essential to maintain the industries of the country? For the War Office to take from the land the 30,000 men they wanted was at the present time a sheer act of lunacy, and in direct opposition to the judgment of that House. (Hear, hear.) But the War Office did not care a straw for that House, nor for the Cabinet, as he had good reason to know. He remembered a friend of his going to the War Office to get a certain thing done. When the late Adjutant-General refused, he said—"This I am asking for is exactly what Mr. Asquith premised to Mr. Redemend in the House yesterday." "I would have you know," said the Adjutant-General, "that we in the War Office take no notice of such promises as are made by Ministers to pass a bill. The War Office never takes the smallest notice of them." They were entitled to know whether the National Director they were setting up was to be trampled upon by the War Office and Lord Devonport, and anybody else who had charge of some other department. This was only laying the foundation for a compulsory scheme, that House would bitterly regret the day it passed it. If the yoke of industrial conscription were laid upon the labour population of the country there would be serious Labour troubles.

Sir CHARLES HENRY—Then may I take it that a general exchange has been quite abandoned?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

Sir,—A short time ago an account was given in the papers of a lady in Canada who knitted 300 pairs of socks by hand in twenty months. There is a lady living in Mountmellick (Queen's County), a past pupil of the Presentation Convent School in that town, who has beaten that record by hand-knitting 420 pairs of socks in twenty months. All the socks have gone, and are going, to our brave lads at the front.—Yours, etc.,
